

Classical Christian Education

(Ninth in a Series)

Now is a good time to find out what your children are being taught

In a recent article in National Review titled Rather Than Reopen, It's Time to Rethink Government Education the authors refer to thirty years of study by the Nehemiah Institute showing that Christian children who attend public schools tend to lose their Christian worldview at a far greater rate than children in other education settings. The 2015 survey found that 90 percent of public schooled Christian teens who attended church had abandoned their Christian worldview to embrace a secularist worldview.

The authors attribute much of this change to public school sex ed curricula, much of which is written by The Human Rights Campaign, “the global leader in pushing transgender ideology,” as well as Planned Parenthood and SIECUS (Sexuality Information and Education Council of the U.S.), just rebranded its motto as “Sex Ed for Social Change.” Sex Ed is an “opportunity to shift the culture” on “LGBTQ equality” and a “vehicle” for creating a “generation of young people who affirm each other’s identities.”

Another news article in the Washington Examiner, referred to a report by the Daily Wire, about a Philadelphia public school English teacher who took to Twitter to inform his followers of his concerns about remote learning. He was worried about parents overhearing his lessons on gender/sexuality. The article states that he said “parents” are his chief concern when teachers are engaging “in the messy work of destabilizing a kid’s racism or homophobia or transphobia.” The teacher tweeted, “How much have students depended on the (somewhat) secure barriers of our physical classrooms to encourage vulnerability? How many of us have installed some version of ‘what happens here stays here’ to help this?” This from an English teacher.

Clearly, there is a movement in schools that should be of concern to Christian parents. Now that those barriers are down, parents have the opportunity to hear just what's being taught in the classroom.

Teachers at First Lutheran Classical School have no fear of parents knowing what their children are being taught, rather they encourage knowing. It is the attitude of our teachers to come along side of parents in the education of their children and not replace them. The curriculum at FLCS is designed to bolster a Christian worldview and not undermine it.
